How do you feel about Vietnam?

OF ROLLING PINS

DO YOUR THING.

For the hippies—those much-maligned and over-defined flower children who are said to be fading from the scene they disturbed so outrageously—this has been a near-commandment.

In hippieland, “doing your thing” means, “Do what is important to you.” Sometimes a person’s “thing” is making light machines or writing poetry or helping people. Whatever it is, however, the “thing” is worthy of respect because the person is special.

For Christians in a twentieth century explosion of causes, conflicts, and categories, the hippies’ reverence for “doing your thing” could be a rich legacy. In too many cases a deal of mischief plagues a home or a parish or human understanding just because one person’s thing—his special focus—is not what the rest of us approve of or consider the right approach.

The Christian whose “thing” is social action, for example, sometimes mourns the neighbor whose sense of justice does not lead to picket line or sit-in. Conversely, the neighbor, utterly convinced that quiet, behind-the-scenes efforts speak more loudly for Christian truth than any picket sign, may shudder to think that young hot-head comes from “our” parish.

Professional church workers, ordained and unordained, sincerely believe that total, full-time endeavor is the best way to work for the coming of the Kingdom. That’s fine—so long as the professional does not shake his head over the sad estate of that layman who is all wrapped up in cost-accounting or advertising sales, but who does manage to pledge and does give time to the Church when he feels needed.

In house and work “scenes,” as the hippies would say, individual “things” often tangle into tenseness. If you have a teenager who is obsessed with the conviction that your generation just cannot understand “where it’s at,” you might be ruffled because he is assailing your specialty: I’m your parent and I know best. If you’re an employer burdened with indifferent help, perhaps your “thing” has been an interest in results, to the exclusion of ever getting around to a word of praise for a job done better than you expected.

AND PICKET SIGNS

In the parish, people and their “things” can be a bellwether of liveliness, or a gravestone marked, Here lies an impasse. If your rector spires your prayers that he may be better able to preach the Gospel, remember to say a word of thanks for his special strength as a counsellor. If your “thing” in parish life is a muscled conviction that stewardship means one substantial pledge each year with no other nonsense, you may be impatient with that old-timer who recalls the good old days of the bake sale. It may be that you’re right—but do you know the sense of accomplishment that comes from baking a from-scratch lemon pie “to the glory of the Lord”?

For all their visible eccentricities, the hippies may have provided with a much-needed new focus to the variegated and frustrating, wondrous and willful patterns in life’s crazy tapestry. Do your thing.

If you bake a good lemon pie and miss the bake-sale days, get out the flour and lemons and volunteer a surprise dessert to that young housewife down the street with three toddlers and a virus. If you recoil from picket-sign Christianity, show your militant fellow parishioners that you can be a good “thing” to set up a tutorial reading project in the parish or a better hiring policy in your office. Do Your Thing.

That advice, after all, is not radically different from a bearded young man’s comment a long time ago:

My Father’s house has many mansions.

A(WO)MEN

Thank you for "A Mother's Prayer" by Jan Olds [see December issue].

She's got the message; now, if she only had the circulation of Betty Friedan (The Feminine Mystique) and other social scientists who postulate that most American women yearn to be Supreme Court justices or secret agents after marriage.

Mrs. Olds described a great calling and I'm happy to be a part of it.

DEAR JOHN?

Concerning . . . "Who put the earring in the offering plate?" [see December issue]. . . .

While I was rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Kittanning, Pennsylvania, 1927-1936 . . . the treasurer discovered a bulging envelope in which was an expensive diamond engagement ring . . . the vestry tried to figure out what it represented and what we ought to do about it. We made extensive private inquiries.

Finally the best we could figure out was that some gal . . . was breaking her engagement, but didn't want to return the ring to her former . . . [fiancé]. So she might have . . . put it on the offering plate to "get rid of it" that way.

And what to do with it? We turned it in privately to a jeweler in the parish and received some $430 for it, which went into the general fund of the parish. . . . It was about the year 1930.

SITUATIONAL ETHICS?

The doctrine of situational ethics holds that there are no moral absolutes, but that the morality of any action must be judged according to the situation in which it occurs.

This doctrine is being increasingly adopted by many Episcopal clergy. Three years ago, our House of Bishops . . . endorsed civil disobedience. Next we heard from some noted clergy that premarital sexual intercourse and, at times, even adultery could be a good thing, although this would be an obvious contradiction of the Church's own marriage vows. Now we hear that homosexuality is morally neutral, that, in some cases, it may even be good.

The doctrine of situational ethics does have a certain appeal and so might in theory even be correct, for it does free us of some of the errors which are committed when we adhere to rigid legalistic values. . . .

Let us take a concrete example: the difficulties which the doctrine of situational ethics can present to an individual. Imagine an emotionally immature . . . girl on a date with a steady boy friend. She has been told by her priest that premarital intercourse is a good thing if it is an expression of love. Her boy friend assures her that this is, indeed, love. . . . This immature girl is forced by none other than her priest, who has destroyed the standard of chastity, to answer these difficult questions in a very brief interval and in a moment of extreme emotion.

Homosexuals should certainly not be condemned or treated as criminals, but as sick persons. . . . Homosexuality is about as morally neutral as schizophrenia or cancer.

MORE ON CLERGY SALARIES

Re: "Full Story, Please" in your December issue under "Letters" written by Mr. Arthur T. Quinn.

Priests work six days a week for many evenings and get thirty days' vacation. . . . The average American works five days. This means an extra fifty-two days off a year plus a one week vacation. Total: fifty-nine days double the number for a priest. And consider that a priest cannot take a weekend off.

. . . By paying these [housing allowance and utilities] instead of salary the parish saves on pension payments. It also means that a tax free house is cheaper to maintain by the parish than paying the priest a stipend which would enable him to buy his own home.

. . . when a priest retires he has equity in a house. Clergy must pay the total amount of their social security taxes (no employer pays half the amount) and rarely does their car allowance equal their expenses. . . .

What "fringe benefits" is Mr. Quinn referring to? . . .

A priest is not trying to become wealthy off his fellow Christians. However, he has every right to expect his fellow Christians to be as considerate of him as they expect their own employers to be of them.

THERE ARE TOO MANY GAMBLERS IN THE CHURCH

Many a clergyman, warden, or vestryman who wouldn't rate a bingo card in the parish house is gambling every day in a game where the stakes are high and the dice are loaded against him when he tolerates a haphazard approach to fire, casualty and liability insurance on church property.

Church safes are stacked with insurance that is inadequate for today's replacement costs, or shot full of loopholes he'll never know are there, until he needs the coverage that doesn't exist.

Now, while you can still get to the safe, take out your insurance policies. Look them over carefully. Better yet, let the people at The Church Insurance Company review your present insurance and make recommendations for fully comprehensive coverage that stacks things in your favor. As specialists in insuring church property, there is no one better qualified to do this.

The coupon below will bring you two things: a copy of a very informative booklet, "A Guide to Property and Casualty Insurance on Churches" . . . and a form on which you can provide information we need to enable us to make sound recommendations. Send it today. All you are gambling is the price of a postage stamp.

THE POWER TO BRING FORTH

Daily Meditations for Lent by Samuel L. Terrien

The disciplines of Lent call for both authentic edification and serious attention to theological study. Here is a volume of forty-eight daily meditations, from Ash Wednesday through Easter Monday, written to help the self be open to "the all-embracing, the all-piercing knowledge of God." Each meditation is based on a passage of Scripture and concludes with an original and provocative prayer. $2.50

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The billboard on this month's signals several eventful journeys for the traveler through our pages. "CH WHO NEEDS IT?" page 14, begins a three-stage Lenten pilgrimage we invite every reader to embark on. This month's selections, led by an essay by Suffragan Bishop Paul Moore, Jr., Washington, D.C., and including a commentary from such Church leaders as the Rev. Dr. Arthur A. Vogel and Rev. Dr. J. V. Langmead Casserley, reveal the tone of the series: many thoughts, quick to read, hard to digest.

On page 23, Bishop Stephen F. H. Jr., Director of the Episcopal Church's Overseas Department, introduces a page special report, "PROJECT PARTNERSHIP/68." This world-wide survey of Anglican needs—some in the works, some trying to get their feet on the ground—meant to be responded to by the "long-mile" actions of individuals, parishes, and dioceses across the Church.

You have read what many national figures think about the war in Vietnam. Now it's your turn to speak up by answering the questionnaire on page 24, "VIETNAM: WHAT DO YOU THINK?" An interchurch feature, this survey appears in nine denominational publications.

"WANTED: A PLACE TO HANG MY HAT," page 16, is a report on housing by associate editor Barbara Kremer. On page 20, associate editor Judy Mathe discusses another aspect of the contemporary Church—unity. "PLAIN TALK ABOUT OUR DIFFERENCES."

As first-rate comedian and active Episcopalian layman, Dick Van Dyke retains no separation of church and humor. "I FEEL A LITTLE FUNNY," page 12, comes from his recent book Altar Egos.

From Convention

... With Love

The Episcopal Church's Executive Council, at its first meeting since Seattle, wrestles with its new duties—including its response to the needs of the poor.

IT WAS RAINING when members of the Executive Council arrived at Seabury House, Greenwich, Connecticut, for their December meeting. Before the three-day session ended, the weather cleared. More than a weather report, that is a fairly accurate description of the sessions: grey and grim at times, but bright at the end.

Like many organizations (see IFCO, page 40), Executive Council is caught in the position of creating a viable institution that can deal with fast-changing problems. With the new priority of General Convention's Special Program, the Council will be working toward restructuring between now and February when the five new objectives of the General Church Program will be translated into actions.

One action needed to be taken right away. The Council passed a Charter for a Staff Unit (see Men and Meaning) and one for a Screening and Review Committee for General Convention's Special Program to get money into areas, where the poor need it, fast enough to do some good.

The discussion on these Charters took parts of all three days, sandwiched between other business (see Worldscene). Finally passed unanimously, the Charters provide for the Screening and Review Committee to:

1. establish working procedures for the Special Program;

2. develop criteria for making and evaluating grants;

3. report and make recommendations to each meeting of Executive Council. Current members of this Committee, appointed by the Presiding Bishop and approved by Council, include a social worker, Negro clergymen, community organizers, a housewife, an economist, two bishops. Executive Council representatives. They will serve only until March 1968.

The Committee will not make grants during this interim period. Any grants that might be made prior to Council action in February will be on the sole authority of the Presiding Bishop.

Modeste Presents

In the afternoon of the first of Council sessions, Mr. Leon Modeste, head of the Special Program Unit, reported on the progress and goals. "The Episcopal Church is starting late on an alleviating national crisis," he said. He explained that "before the Church can accuse the secular world of many social injustices and discriminatory practices, it must first remove the mote from its own eye."

He said he realized that the Church's Special Program could barely scratch the surface but the Program did intend to cor-

CHIEF PASTOR

"As your presiding officer, I try to use a light rein and no purs," Bishop John E. Hines said at the opening of the Council sessions. His leadership, based on mutual trust," of the sessions prompted Mr. Emmett Harmon of Liberia to rise and thank him or it.

"The diversity of the Council members should be able to make consensus for the good of the whole Church," Bishop Hines said, and he led the sessions with just the right combination of restraint, compassion, and humor to do just that.

When Leon Modeste was presenting his program at the first session, he told how he went to the Presiding Bishop's office to talk to him, and "he assured me he was behind me all the way. When I went back the next day, they told me he was in Ecuador!"

"Well, I didn't say how far behind you I was," Bishop Hines answered.

ate on a philosophy of concern and quick response and would place eighty percent of its funds directly in the hands of the poor.

"The Special Program is also aware that it cannot achieve its stated goals alone," he explained, "No one person, one group, or one church can solve the problems of the poor and the powerless. Let us hope we are not too late."

Faith Now or Later?

Following Mr. Modeste's presentation on the Program, Council members asked him questions to clarify some of their interpretations. The following are excerpts taken from this discussion.

Bishop Gerald F. Burrill, Chicago: Will you be asking specific help from some of us? I would like to tell you not to hesitate to clue us in.

Modeste: I see this is a Council project. We need all the talent the Council has.

Charles Crump, Tennessee: We originally agreed that grants will not be made to groups who advocate violence. In Memphis, they want a good safeguard that will keep this money out of the hands of some people. And they ask me, 'Do they mean what they say, or what they do?'

Modeste: No, we will not give money to groups who advocate violence. We will have to check the proposal and check the history of the group.

Crump: How do you define violence? Do you say mass blocking of communications is violence?

Modeste: I can't make a blanket statement. We have to judge on individual cases.

Crump: You mentioned meeting with a group that advocates violence.

Modeste: Part of working in a community is the ability to deal with every group. All I'm saying is that we're in contact with them.

William G. Ikard, New Mexico and Southwest Texas: Are we going to jump in with both feet and spend all the money right away?

Modeste: We can't throw it in all at once. We want to bring others on board. We can't do this alone; that would be suicide. With the Presiding Bishop leading the way, we may be able to convince others to come along.

Bishop Burrill: This program envisions not necessarily the idea that we can finance—even ecumenically—in a big way. But as Christians we are sent to do this. If we haven't had a bad conscience, we should have. At General Convention we underwent a conversion. Now we have to make that conversion a part of the Church's life so we will act as a catalyst.

Crump: Government programs are prohibited from doing anything on religion. Is our program going to have religion? If not, why put our money in it?

Modeste: Bishop Burrill made an important point. We don't have to put up signs. You can tell a phony from a guy who's serious and committed.

Bishop George Murray, Alabama: I had the same understanding at General Convention that Mr. Crump did. I asked who was responsible, and the answer always came back 'Executive Council.' I stumped the Diocese of Alabama selling this program and said Executive Council would be responsible, and I will be sitting there and will be cognizant of my responsibility to see that criteria for grants are made and kept. We would do well—for at least one year—to make

"URBAN CRISIS" TO "SPECIAL PROGRAM"

What began at General Convention as the "Crisis in American Life" was then popularly called "urban crisis" and emerged at the December Executive Council as "General Convention Special Program."

The confusion over the name of the program which came as the result of the Presiding Bishop's opening Convention address has been considerable. The original "in American Life" tag was not an "operational" title, so it became "urban crisis," despite the fact that some of the money would go to on-going rural projects. Then it became the Special Program.

But someone at the Council meeting asked what Special Program meant anyway. What it really means is that the money will be used on a priority basis, and the consensus now is that the priority is in the urban ghettos with mostly black people in them. So the "crisis" money will be going on a priority basis to black community groups who can effect change, but the rural programs will continue to be supported.

Any questions?

From Convention . . . With Love

these decisions ourselves.

Mrs. Cyrus M. Higley, Central New York: The women of the Church gave this money with the understanding that it would be given with no strings attached.

Bishop Albert Rhett Stuart, Georgia: I agree with Bishop Burrill that a conversion took place. This is not true, however, of the Church back yonder. They haven't been converted. I think we had better be smart about how we open these doors.

Dean Gordon Gillett, Quincy: One of the things the Presiding Bishop made clear is that the world is on fire. To tie this thing down to the machinery we already have is disastrous. We can't wait. We must have faith now.

Clarity and Confusion

For some, the discussion cleared the air; others were still confused. A letter from the vestry of St. Paul's, Artesia, New Mexico, read on the first day of Council, dramatized the dilemma many Council members felt. St. Paul's said it would not contribute to the General Church Program as long as it includes the Special Program.

Decisions came hard. As a troubled member put it, "Here they say I'm a Ku Kluxer, but when they get home they say I'm a wide-eyed liberal and radical. Sometimes they can be real frustrating."

In between full Council sessions, departmental meetings wrestled with budget cuts in light of new priorities. "We acted corporately and now must address our problems corporately and share them," Mr. Warren Turner, second vice-pres-

SPECIAL PROGRAM TEAM:

MEN AND MEANING

THEY HAVE THE cohesive spontaneity of the Green Bay Packers and the zany "in" humor of The Beatles. When three of them showed up at an Executive Council session in turtlenecks, one of them suggested they have a game of football in the yard. They come on strong with jargon and jokes, but you sense they can be serious and that they know the people behind the concepts.

"We had a guy in Chicago who stood up to Mafia threats on his life to work on a racial discrimination real estate case," one of them says. Commitment is something they admire—and possess.

Ranging in age from mid-twenties to mid-forties, the Special Program team is committed to putting necessary money, expertise, and power into the hands of people to give them a chance to help themselves. Each team member has an assignment in this effort.

The Rev. John Stevens was a rector in Houston who "started one Monday with three adults and ten kids, and a week later every black high school was closed in a boycott to get an integrated staff.

"When we put people with expertise in, it means the Church is prepared to do the job," he says—and adds, "We intend to be radical, intend to take risks, intend to trust people to solve their own problems—and we fully expect to make mistakes."

The Rev. Quinland Gordon was a Methodist before he was ordained in the Episcopal Church. Active in civil rights activities for years, he will maintain contacts with Negro Episcopal clergymen and talk with bishops to implement the statement on clergy placement adopted by the House of Bishops in 1965. He wants to develop strategies by which candidates who are black can be called as rectors and elected to Executive Council and diocesan policy-making boards.

"I feel encouraged and elated by this new program," he says, "because it indicates that the Episcopal Church is willing to take the risks of getting involved with people who need help and who can also provide help for the mission of the Episcopal Church."

The Rev. Charles Glenn is the youngest member of the team, but has contacts with community organizations all over the country. He was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where his father was a priest and chaplain at Harvard.

"The most important thing about the team is style—a style of responsiveness and concern. That fact makes the whole question of 'We are duplicating OEO programs irrelevant,'" he says.

The Rev. John Steidl, a Presbyterian minister, has been conducting training institutes for the last eighteen months. In St. Louis, the 100 people who attended an institute came down to breakfast to find only a note on their plates saying there were certain issues and needs in this community, and their job was to determine how to solve them.

"Then they had to diagnose the situation, determine who had the power to feed them, and plan a strategy to get fed," Mr. Steidl explains.

"So many people are hung up on conflict and change," he says of the team's purpose. "We've got to feed them up—make them see how they feel and face it."

Mr. Barry Menuez worked for fifteen years in Saul Alinsky's Industrial Areas Foundation community organization, which got the first racial conviction of a real estate blockbuster. "He was a guy who reminded Council members. Bishop Stephen S. Bayne, Overseas Department head, reported that overseas bishops had responded well to the cuts and the Bishop of Jesselton not only accepted them, but sent money to help the domestic crisis. Presiding Bishop John E. Hines replied that the poverty and crime seen in South American barrios convinced him that urban problems were just as intense elsewhere.

Changing the Structure

The day before the Council offight a house on Sunday for $8,500 on the Thursday before that he sold the house to a black family for $14,500.

"The victory came about," he explains, "because the organization was strong enough to hang on through sixteen court delays."

Fuenuez, who is the team's field consultant, says they want to find out "Who's there? Who wants us?" The organization is going to happen with or without the Episcopal Church. This is an opportunity for the Church to be a part of history—an opportunity it missed in the '30's of the Labor Movement. We're standing outside asking to be asked

Another layman, Mr. Leon Monte, heads the team members (see January issue). He thinks the action of the Executive Council will give them the authority "to really go ahead." It gives renewed confidence in the Church to grapple with the issues of the day. This type of thing is the Church's salvation—I don't want to make it sound that great, but that's exactly how I feel."

He thinks "the Church, above all, has to show this faith in people. I wasn't kidding when I said I hope it's not too late. We just can't keep putting people off—just can't." What does he think of the team? "They're a hard-swingin' gang of guys."

cially convened, an orientation meeting was held for Council members, seventeen of whom were newly elected.

In the past, General Church programs have been listed under Executive Council departments. The proposed new approach will cut across departmental lines, with purposes or objectives to be met.

In summarized form, the five objectives are:

- strengthen existing and new forms of corporate mission and ministry.

- build cooperation, understanding, and unity among men, nations, and churches.

- help people in congregations and communities to know and respond to the Gospel within the context of the issues of life today.

- secure the rights, dignity, and well-being of persons and groups in society, and assist the Church to join with others to eliminate poverty, injustice, and the deprivation of human rights.

- provide supportive services for the Church's corporate life through communication, research and study, data processing, planning, evaluation, wider financial support, and improvement of administration and management procedures of the Executive Council.

The three-days' debate was potentially divisive at almost every turn, but a supportive spirit and the sensitive leadership of the Presiding Bishop took the edge off. Humor helped, too. Once a discussion on viable dioceses brought the jesting question: "What if the bishops aren't viable?"

"That will have to come up at a later meeting," someone replied.

At dinner, after the longest discussion on the Special Program, two bishops were talking about the trouble they would have explaining what happened to their people back home. "Wouldn't it be nice," one of them said, "if we could pass a resolution saying 'we all voted responsibly,' and then wear it home on our chests?"

MORE THAN JUST SUNDAY MORNING

Easter worship should include more than just one church service. All during Lent . . . the weeks preceding Easter . . . earnest Christians seek to prepare their hearts and minds to participate in the full joy of the Resurrection.

The Upper Room is a ministry to the family and the individual. It provides a valuable worship aid, with devotions written especially for the Easter season.

By using The Upper Room, you will be joining millions of other Christians around the world in daily Lenten-Easter worship.

SUNDAY USHER: Really, Mrs. Allen, sitting in the front pew isn't nearly as bad as you think.

when I find myself doing the same things in church that I do anywhere else. Sometimes I want to laugh at myself for the things I do, but then I wonder whether I ought to laugh in church. But why not? Maybe that's where we need a little laughter to remind us that we're all just people, and when we're in church we're just as human as we are anywhere else—and God doesn't love us the less for it."

A LENTEN PILGRIMAGE

"Freedom and unity are the two feet on which the Church makes its pilgrimage.

"But how can the Church enter into today's theological and social ferment and, at the same time, meet its equal obligation to guard and nourish its own unity in Christ?" asks the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John E. Hines.

Believing this to be a question in urgent need of your own thinking, THE EPISCOPALIAN has excerpted parts from the Report on Theological Freedom and Social Responsibility (Seabury, $2.95). We present here the first of three parts, as starting-gates.

The Report is provocative and disciplined social and theological inquiry. Lent is a good time for growing: Will you join the discussion?

ERRORS . . . A distinction I like to make [is] between adventurous answers, which may well be mistaken, and hardened positions which deserve to be called errors. The former are an affair of deficient intelligence: the latter, of deficiency in what can only be called good will. . . .

PILGRIMS . . . The Church must recognize that ambiguity and a limited perspective are characteristics of human life in the world. The Church, in its human members, is subject to such ambiguity and limited perspective also and must not pretend to a degree of definitional clarity that its own history denies and which would be quite inconsistent with its pilgrim nature. . . . —ARTHUR A. CHA

We do?

This may be the most crucial moment in Church history since the first and second centuries. First, the immense speed of technological development changes the way in which we must deal with time itself. This change is not just of degree, but of kind. I feel we are coming over the top of the first hill of a roller coaster and about to roar down. I'm not sure we have fastened our safety belts.

Second, . . . one key to theology's rapid change in direction is the massive translation necessary to Hellenize our thinking, to break out of the Athenian captivity, if you will.

Third, the social scene, by its comparably radical change, is changing the method of charity to the extent of almost changing the substance of charity: The urgent commitment in the American continent is to set men free. For the greater part of the world, the need is for bread for the millions of tons. To meet the former or the latter need requires social reconstruction, not merely social action along old guidelines.

Fourth, the rapidity of change requires of all institutions an elasticity beyond any imagining, as they attempt to minister to men whose cultural attitudes change every three centuries and as they are required by the next generation to have integrity or perish.

Finally, the indications increase that the psychological contemporary man is changing in such a manner that the customary ways of spirituality no longer accomplish communication with the Ultimate. . . .

. . . Old rules and ways and principles no longer valid. We search for solutions in semi-darkness:

Stumbling . . . He who seeks truth may or may not find it, but if he seeks truth honestly and with ability, he is almost certain at some point or other to stumble upon error, and there is much to be said for the view that detection of error is even more important than the discovery of truth itself. . . .

solutions we cannot see. We stumble gladly when stumbling indicates we have come upon something of value. . . .

I cannot help but think that the movement of the Church in this age is a movement toward freedom. Every generation in the history of the Church has been a breaking down of the legalism of older atrophied forms. Jesus broke open the legalism of the Jews, Luther broke open the structure of medievalism, Wesley the rampancy of eighteenth-century England.

In our age we already see breakings open on every side: theology, liturgy, ministry, ecumenics. . . .

In a pragmatic, nonconceptual world, any institution including the Church must show a social usefulness in the broadest sense of that term. Two clear uses of the Church, both in line with her divine vocation, come to mind. First, the continuity of a value-setting institution in society which has its touchstone in transcendent reality (or if transcendence no longer is a useful concept, which has its touchstones in universal good) and then in the good of any one group, one age, or one part of the universe.

History shows that any effective force in society must be institutionalized. The Church at the moment is still the most likely institution for this task. This task of value setting implies social criticism of the most radical kind. But, in an existential age, an institution for criticism which does not also attempt to implement its criticism will be less than valid and less than insightful. Another pragmatic task closely allied to this is the role of the churchman as the last generalist in an increasingly specialized world. As catholic men we are by definition generalists. Together we can make a skilled specialty of the task of generalism. Further, social criticism and its implementation is essential to the integrity which the young and future generation find lacking in the Church and because of which they leave us, not in anger but in mild disgust. . . .

" . . . Ah yes, we need change, . . . but we must not hurt the flock. We have obligations to the Church," we say, . . . "to keep the boat steady, not to move so fast that we leave people behind. . . ."

But . . . the reality is that we must move so fast as to leave people behind. If we do not, the whole Church will be left behind.

We are about five laps behind already. It is presently impossible to stand between the affluent and the poor in the center of the poverty gap and be able to have communication with both—or even to understand both. . . . Similarly, . . . we stand lonesome between the generations. . . .

We bishops try to minister to all in a diocese, and yet can we with integrity minister in a way no longer really true, no longer reflecting the reality we perceive, simply because older people like it and because it once reflected an understanding of truth?

Time makes ancient good uncouth; time makes ancient truth untrue; time makes ancient beauty, camp. Yet, in our diocese, for instance, we have tobacco farmers and space scientists, muskrat trappers and a president's wife, millionaires and welfare recipients. . . . It is impossible to relativize the truth in such a way as to please all these, even if such a course were moral, which it is not. . . .

—PAUL MOORE, JR.

Secularization Is Suicide

. . . An agnostic but sympathetic biologist has written:

As surely as Luther conceded the supremacy of state authority above priestly authority, so the American churches have, in effect, if less explicitly, subordinated their distinctive religious values to the values of American society. Thus, though religious practice has increased, the vacuousness of popular religious ideas has also increased: the content and meaning of religious commitment has been acculturated.

If there is any truth in this diagnosis, the demand for a complete secularizing of the Church's faith must surely represent the logically ultimate stage in the process: for all its superficial plausibility it is really religious suicide.

It is commonly highly critical of the institutional side of Christianity but this is the only side that it makes intelligible. For it, the outlook and activities of contemporary society are normative and the Church has somehow or other to meet them on their own terms.

The Church has no distinctive insights into the political, cultural, and social situation; its task is simply that of injecting moral vigor into the process of achieving ends which society has adopted on purely secular grounds. Since the Church has lost its distinctive character it finds itself faced with the choice between either melting away altogether into the coming great No-church, or converting itself into a social service organization of an inevitably somewhat amateur type, or, paradoxically enough, of becoming a society for the preservation of itself, without being able to offer any convincing grounds why and for what purpose it is worth preserving

Wanted: A Place To Hang My Hat

THIS IS A happy story. It is about a young man who earned a Ph.D. in clinical psychology, was commissioned as an officer in the United States Army, and assigned to a hospital in Bethesda, Maryland. He found an apartment for himself and his family—wife, one child, another on the way—in a suburb near the hospital.

This story sounds routine, an example of a young couple on their way to a constructive future. The full account, however, includes a middle section that is not happy at all.

For the young psychologist, the events unfolded in the following way. He decided against inner-city Washington, D.C., where most "people like him" are concentrated: It was simply too far from his work. Besides, The Washington Post advertised an abundance of apartments available in suburban communities close to the hospital.

He made twenty-seven inquiries.

Twenty-seven times he was told, "Sorry, we don't rent to Negroes." People did not mean to be cruel. They were only telling him the way things are.

The young man did not give up, however. He wrote to a friend, Mr. Joseph D. Ban, executive director of the University Christian Association at Penn State University. Mr. Ban did not give up either: He made telephone calls, wrote letters. Finally, with the help of a United States Senator, Joseph Tydings of Maryland, Mr. Ban directed his young friend to an integrated suburban apartment.

Not all such stories end that way.

"A man's home is his castle," the old saying goes. But for many Americans, "castles" are moated by prejudice and the silence of nice people. It does not have to be that way.

Take the young mechanic with a good job and a healthy enough stake to move his family out of a Philadelphia slum. At first, an apartment-house manager agreed to rent him an apartment. Next day, deposit in hand, the young man returned, to be confronted by the manager's wife. "Sorry," she said, "I rented the apartment to someone else just before my husband saw you, and he did not know about it."

The mechanic returned to his slum apartment. He was too disgusted and discouraged to protest when he later saw the same apartment listed for rent in a newspaper.

These two case histories illustrate the housing picture in most areas of the United States today. Incidents dealing with the even more vexing subject of selling houses to Negro and other minority-group members provide material enough to fill a library.

These two incidents also demonstrate that one person who is willing to help can make a major difference. In the young psychologist's case, one person was a determined Christian named Joseph D. Ban. Other links between a man and his "castles" have been a principled realtor, a local clergyman, or a small but well-organized fair-housing organization in a residential section.

The Key

Residential segregation intensifies all racial tension in the United States today. Some see it as "the key question of our national life in the 1960's."

Christians who will face the realities of racial injustice, who have been able to listen to the pleas, announcements, and plain talking from their churches, do not need special documentation on the scope of the problem, nor do they need information about action that can be taken.

Several churches and church groups have worked hard, and continued to fight, for fair-housing legislation. California's Christian-led opposition to Proposition 14—a referendum to repeal the Rumford Fairhousing Act—is a prominent example of action that cost much in human sacrificed resources. This effort was defeated but only temporarily, since the reme Court recently declared Pro-tion 14 unconstitutional.

Many laymen have also taken the in working for equal opportuin housing for all Americans. Mr. ald S. Frey, an Episcopal lawyer, been a long-time pioneer in this
t. His courageous efforts and ng Christian convictions have ved many others to share in a y, innovative organization called United Citizens' Committee for edom of Residence. Based in nston, Illinois, this organization,

Study in Sanskrit

Despite any number of positive mples, however, the hard fact is too few Christians have joined in battle for "open" housing.
For many churchmen with all good ntions, the idea of open housing a key issue in the Church's mis-today is akin to trying to under-nd Sanskrit. One classic example comes from an inner-city white gyman, rector of a predominantly gro parish. He has reported that received a call from a lady in a urban parish which had been lying the Mutual Responsibility Interdependence document in th and had become ashamed that r all-white parish was not pracng MRI in its own life. "We have Negroes. Could you send us e?" she asked.

The requested delegates were not vided. Instead, the two parishes up a genuine exchange of suburand urban parishioners, including ts not only to Sunday services but individual homes. For many mem-s of both parishes, this produced l change in understanding of what Church is about: They could see h other as fellow Christians, in-ad of "We" and "They."

The Dollar Doldrums

The most deep-seated fear any cussion of housing raises is "when groes move in, property values go wn." In 1960, University of Calinia economist Luigi Laurenti published his famous study, Property Values and Race. His findings, which consistently duplicated in later reports by other investigators, say integrated communities follow the same general property-value patterns as segregated communities: Values rise in about 44 percent of both kinds of neighborhoods, hold steady in some 41 percent, and drop about 15 percent of the time.

Mixing or Meddling?

Christian action in campaigns for fair-housing troubles many laymen.
Such mixing of "religion and politics"
often amplifies a rumble of philosophical and theological volcanoes. Can a government tell a man to whom he must sell his property? Since when is it unchristian to hang onto your right to sell your property to whom you please?

Mrs. Harold Sorg of Berkeley,
California, distinguished churchwom-an and member of the Episcopal Church's Executive Council, offers this viewpoint: "When we begin to talk about the principle of the right to own and sell property, the right to acquire property is overlooked. . . ."

It is reasonable to predict that churches and individual churchmen will keep on sharing in open-housing campaigns. But the journey to prog-

Saigon's worst slums

Saigon's worst slum is in the Khanh Hoi district, the area nearest the port. The poverty and disease in this area, crowded beyond belief, is appalling. A new Vietnam Christian Service project, headed by Neil and Marta Brenden, a young husband and wife team, both trained social workers, is attempting to build a better life for those living in Khanh Hoi.

This couple, with Carolyn Nyce, a public health nurse, and 11 Vietnamese workers, are tangibly demonstrating to this poverty riddled slum, the importance of helping people to help themselves. If you care for your fellow man, then may we ask you to help the Vietnamese help themselves. Your contribution to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief brings us one step nearer this goal. WANTED: A PLACE TO HANG MY HAT ress is long. Almost all the states have some kind of legislation, but much of this is either ineffectual or evasive; some of the most emphatic laws are more often observed in the breach. "If you want an example of massive civil disobedience, this is one," says the Rev. James L. Breeden, an Episcopal clergyman and assistant director of the Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches.

The "political" activities of Christians in fair-housing campaigns are motivated by concern not only for those who seek to find housing, but also for those who are caught in the agonizing middle between conscience and local pressure. A person willing to sell his house to a Negro man hold back for fear of community censure. Laws providing for freedom of residence actually result in bridging the gap between conscience and practice.

Down to Basics

The basic reason for Christian involvement in fair-housing programs, however, always comes down to the case of one person looking for a place to live. Nobody wants to move into a community where he is not wanted, or where he will be politely or not-so-politely made aware that he is "different." Many Negroes who can afford decent housing are apt to remain in slum dwellings rather than endure suburban snubs.

At the same time, as educational and employment opportunities have been opened up, Negro Americans have made astonishing advances in the last decade. In Chicago, a city with as many racial troubles as any other, a survey shows that "at least 35 to 40 percent of the Negro families belong to the 'middle class'—judged by college education, occupation, and home ownership." [Note: This "home ownership" means residence in non-white sections in metropolitan areas.]

SCENE: A Living Room—maybe yours.

CAST: Men and women of many faiths, ages, and opinions.

THEME: "Propaganda ends where dialogue begins."

—Marshall McLuhan

PRODUCED BY: Laymen.

DIRECTED BY: National Council of Churches, Division of Christian Unity, and Roman Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, Apostolate of Good Will.

Episcopalian: "Many Protestants think Roman Catholics worship only the saints and Mary."

Roman Catholic I: "Oh, but the saints don't ever replace Christ."

Roman Catholic II: "The last time I went to Chicago my plane had to circle the field for three hours before we got permission to land. I said Hail Marys the whole time."

Presbyterian: "Were you saying them to Mary or to Christ?"

Roman Catholic II: "Well, I really don't know."

Roman Catholic III: "Hail Marys are a natural because they have the thing about saving us from death."

Roman Catholic II: "Well, I think I said it because it's a prayer I'm familiar with."

Several thousand people in more than 800 communities across the United States are engaging in exchanges like this one. Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, Orthodox, and Protestants are finding that playing verbal catch is more fun than throwing clichés against a wall of like opinions. Using a red and white paper-back, Living Room Dialogues, as a springboard, groups meet in each other's homes to talk about their own and their neighbor's faith.

"There's no reason why couples shouldn't talk about religion instead of playing bridge, or talking baseball," Msgr. John K. Clarke, Los Angeles, California, said when the dialogues began two years ago. In an age where "batting averages" in a commuter train conversation may be Bishop Pike's instead of Willie Mays', the living room dialogue idea has taken hold.

Mrs. Theodore Wedel, associate general secretary of the National Council of Churches' Division of Christian Unity, believes the freedom the book allows also contributes to its success. "People no longer want canned programs from their national church," she explains. "They have the initiative and want to use it."

Since exchanges were already taking place, "we wanted to help them along," says the Rev. William A. Norgren, Director of the National Faith and Order Department. To this, he and the Rev. William Greenspun, national director of Roman Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, co-edited the book.

Essays and reference material in Living Room Dialogues cover several subjects, ranging from common Christian heritage to "Why We Don't Break Bread Together." The book was the first joint venture of the National Council of Churches and the Roman Catholic Paulist Press. A "best seller" by religious book standards, the paperback has sold well over 150,000 copies.

Written for "interested, inquiring laymen," the book suggests me-be held without benefit of clergy. There is no doubt that lay people ask questions of each other they would be reluctant to ask of their clergy," says Mrs. Robert Mommsen, Redwood City, California, discussion leader. And a Seymour, Connecticut, leader found a clergyman's silence hindered discussion. Clergy sometimes initiate groups through local councils of churches, however, occasionally serve as consultants to a group's sticky questions. Although a majority of the participants are women, possibly because Protestant Church Women sponsor these sessions in many areas, men have turned out in substantial numbers. "One big surprise was the attendance and participation of the men, who were not enthusiastic about the project at first," Mrs. Paul Beatty, Charlotte, North Carolina, reports. Differing ways of worship sparked lively discussions. For example, a Roman Catholic in a Moorestown, New Jersey, living room had this to say: "There are many things the Roman Catholic Church considers sacramental: crucifixes, candles, etc., many things in my opinion. I personally abhor walking into the confession booth and seeing lipstick on the feet of a crucifix. But I guess these things help some people."

"I know what you mean," a Roman Catholic woman offered. "I was in church once, saying a few silent prayers and a little man walked up to the altar and threw a kiss. I thought, 'How lovely.' But I could no more do that than fly."

An Episcopalian spoke up. "Maybe faith is easier for an emotional person. We think things out too much. It's a colder thing—no less a belief, but we have to figure it out first."

Sometimes humor helps overcome potential differences of opinion. In one group the question, "What is the difference between a Roman Catholic and an Episcopalian?" brought the quick reply, "The Episcopalian flunked Latin."

Renewal is always a lively subject. One Roman Catholic asked how Protestantism is changing. A Presbyterian mentioned the new Confession of 1967, which updates the statements of belief of the Church, and the Directory of Worship, which stresses more frequent Communion. An Episcopalian said, "In my parish we're taking Christ into the homes; we have more house Communion."

"I think people are afraid of change," a young Roman Catholic father said.

An Episcopalian added, "But don't forget there are other fears, too. In our church when we do something different, someone immediately says, 'That's too Catholic.'"

"In our church it's 'That's too Protestant,' " was a Roman Catholic's quick answer.

A Paoli, Pennsylvania, housewife listened quietly while a Roman Catholic seminarian explained how the translation of Latin words sometimes causes confusion. Suddenly she leaned forward. "Well, not only that, but how many of us really believe the words we say in prayers—in 'one holy, catholic, and apostolic church' ? And yet, if everybody who says those words believed them—believed 'catholic' means universal—we'd have unity, you know. When we say 'Our Father,' I sometimes think we mean 'Our Presbyterian Father,' or 'Our Episcopalian Father.'"

People can't pray together and not be changed a little," Mr. Norgren says. A discussion leader in Chelsea, Michigan, bears him out. "The most positive change in attitude in our group seemed to be the hope that in the fairly near future there might be a truly open Communion, so we could all partake of the Lord's Supper even though we still interpret it differently."

Mrs. Arnold Leech, Portland.

Free Booklet On Wills

This free booklet, published by The Episcopal Church Foundation, tells you how to evaluate gifts in relation to the latest Federal tax laws—how to make Uncle Sam your partner in giving—how Congress encourages charitable giving, and how, at the same time, benefits to you as donor can be substantial.

The booklet also tells how you can help build a church, how you can help educate a minister, how you can create a memorial to a loved one, how you can do these things and other things without inconvenience to yourself.

In 1949, The Right Reverend Henry Knox Sherrill, then Presiding Bishop, established The Episcopal Church Foundation to help men and women in their efforts to help others. How the Foundation can aid you in this effort is explained in the free booklet. This booklet costs you nothing, but many men and women have found in it the joy and satisfaction they were seeking. So write today for the free booklet on "Thoughtful Giving." The booklet will be sent to you without cost or obligation. PLAIN TALK ABOUT OUR DIFFERENCES

Maine, sums up what seems to be a pervasive result of the discussions in her area. "I have learned that dialogue is not just a nice conversation, but a genuine openness of exchange between people with no desire to change the thoughts of the others."

She adds, "Before dialogue, I did my best to be honest, but now I feel

New Book Out

A Second Living Room Dialogues volume comes just in time for the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, January 18-25. This interfaith week begins a twelve-month program of ecumenical action sponsored by the World Council of Churches' Faith and Order Commission.

Local groups throughout the world, in addition to joining in worship, will study such matters as crime, delinquency, segregation, affluence and poverty, and war and peace.

If you would like to produce your own living room dialogue, using either Living Room Dialogues or Second Living Room Dialogues (price per volume, $1.00) write: Department of Publication Service, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York, N.Y. 10027, or Paulist Press, 21 Harristown Road, Glen Rock, N.J. 07452.

the heavy weight of the responsibility of being honest because of my church membership."

Mrs. Leech, like others, finds that holding prejudices is harder after you've heard the other fellow out. As weaknesses are admitted, stereotypes shattered, and points of view explored, dialogue participants want to apply their newfound confidence to concrete situations. Many groups are now discussing birth control, divorce, confession, children's instruction, and mixed marriages.

invite you to invest in new frontiers

BY STEPHEN BAYNE

FOR THE FOURTH YEAR, our Church has adopted and now presents to our dioceses and parishes a list of overseas projects, ready to be met by our voluntary support over and above our quotas, and of highest priority in the eyes of the churches which have planned them. As in previous years, the projects have been drawn from the regional directories circulated by the Anglican Executive Officer, from World Council of Churches' project lists, and from the planning procedures of our own overseas jurisdictions.

They are, for the most part, evaluated by the Executive Officer and his advisory committee; they are selected and identified by my own colleagues, in the light of our broad commitments overseas; they are given formal approval and priority by the Executive Council. Thus they come to our Church with every possible endorsement and strategic support which can be given them.

In our response this year, we shall be building on three years of experience—the three years which began at St. Louis with the adoption of the first MRI resolutions and objectives. What those years gave us, above all else, was an apprenticeship in a new and more responsible way of sharing in the mission of the Church. Through all the confusions of that first exposure to the voluntary support of projects, lessons were learned; and perhaps chief among them was the lesson of stewardship—disciplined, responsible, imaginative.

Our Church needs to learn the joy and power of "second-mile giving," not because this is "better" than any other giving, not because there is anything wrong with the broad equalities of a generally-agreed budget and quota, but because by its very nature an anonymous budget of commitment can never, by itself, satisfy the longing of people for personal responsibility adequate to match the resilient and imaginative stewardship which is our ideal.

More and more our Church, indeed the whole Anglican Communion, is learning to look at its needs in two categories. One is that of our continuing obligations, such as the salaries of missionaries in the field or the ongoing expenses of agreed programs and institutions. The other category is that of the frontiers of new obedience and opportunity which lie before us.

I can well imagine the time when such a division will become an accepted usage in our Church. When it does, we shall still have our national Program and Budget, no doubt; but we will also have, as an equal practice, a constant armory of new things—projects, new forms of ministry, manpower needs—which our Lord's mission requires of us. And we will have learned the more thoughtful stewardship, which will call us to respond to those frontiers in different ways and so be better masters of the wealth God has given us.

If this is to come to pass, "Projects for Partnership" will be seen to be an essential step toward deeper stewardship. Those who have planned these projects and made them known to us have done so as stewards. It is now our privilege to join them in a like serious and intent obedience. This year is one of particular urgency in this respect, with the inescapable reductions in budget overseas because of our own emergency needs at home. I pray that there may be, in every diocese and parish, a fresh discovery of the privilege of voluntary, personal, disciplined response to the Church's mission overseas, to the invitation to partnership in the Church, across the world.

At the practical level, let me make five comments. First, this list is no more than an index; further description of each project and, often, background material is available in the Overseas Department to meet the needs of interested people.

Second, because these projects are for our response over and above our quotas, we must continue to require that every request to undertake a project come to us with the assurance of the diocese, through whatever agency it may have for this purpose, that the promised support is approved by the diocese as in fact above and beyond quotas.

Third, because of the complexity of such a voluntary system and the fact that all Anglican Churches consider all projects, it is essential that any proposed commitment to a project be cleared with the Overseas Department before it is actually made. (The commitment itself is in the form of a letter from me to the overseas bishop in question, saying that our Church will guarantee the fulfillment of whatever the commitment is.)

Fourth, we are continuing the request for the "30-Percent Fund"—the voluntary additional gift to the Executive Council of 30 percent of the dollar value of the project—to provide a central resource from which we can meet un-met needs of high priority.

Finally, we are again requesting that all remittances of funds for overseas dioceses, whether for projects or for any other purposes, be made through the Treasurer of the Executive Council. Only so can we be kept informed and thus enabled to give balanced and fair response to the immense variety of overseas needs.

May I now, for the fourth year, commend this list to the prayers and response of the Church? I could not be more thankful for what the past three years have given us, both in the joy of new relationships discovered and in the gratitude we should feel at having been permitted to share, in new ways, in the life of the Church overseas. In this we owe an enormous debt to the MRI commission and their faithful steward, Walker Taylor, who led us into a new country and helped us to find a new way of discipleship. Now we are on our own in this, in a year of painful testing. I pray that God will prove His power in us.

WHAT DO I DO NOW?

First, remember that a project is not a private charity but an element of supreme importance in the relationship of our Church with a sister Church overseas. The privilege of undertaking a project gives you the responsibility of acting in behalf of all of us. Therefore your first approach should be to the person or group authorized by your bishop to coordinate project support in your diocese.

Detailed information about each of the projects is available from the Overseas Department, Episcopal Church Center, 815 Second Avenue, New York, New York 10017. The wish to undertake a project or group of projects should be communicated at once by the diocese to the Overseas Department. The official commitment to the projects is then made by the Overseas Department in the name of the Episcopal Church with thanks for the initiative of the diocese concerned.

Dateline: Tomorrow

- Look for new interdenominational cooperation in urban work following major meetings between Presiding Bishop John E. Hines and other Church leaders after the Bishop's mid-January return from Okinawa.
- Rumors are circulating in Vatican City that Pope Paul will soon issue his long-expected statement on birth control.
- A special committee of the Consultation on Church Union is busy compiling a set of guidelines for ecumenical relations and actions among local churches of the 10 participating denominations.
- Episcopalians and Roman Catholics may be much closer to receiving Communion together following agreements reached at an Anglican-Roman consultation in Mississippi.

Theological Education Board Appointed

Presiding Bishop John E. Hines has appointed, and Executive Council has approved, members of a Board for Theological Education which will work toward improvement of education for the whole Church.

The board members, who will seek to implement the recommendations of the report, "Ministry for Tomorrow," are:

- Bishop Frederick J. Warnecke of Bethlehem, convener;
- Mr. Hershner Cross of New York, vice-president of General Electric;
- Prof. James A. Martin of New York, Chairman, Department of Religion, Columbia University;
- The Rev. Charles Price of Harvard University Memorial Chapel;

► Dr. Charles V. Willie, head of the Department of Sociology, Syracuse University.

They will serve six-year terms.

Serving three-year terms are:

- Mr. Amory Houghton, Jr., board chairman of Corning Glass Works;
- Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran of Alexandria, Va., head of the Department of Christian Education at Virginia Theological Seminary;
- The Rev. Walter Ong, a Jesuit educator at St. Louis University;
- The Rev. Almus M. Thorp, Jr., Dean of Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio.

In the Dioceses: Action This Fall

Nineteen dioceses convened in the weeks following the Seattle General Convention. Most of them acted in response to the Presiding Bishop's General Convention call to meet the Crisis in American Life. The Convention host, Olympia, approved a proposal to give $50,000 to the Central Area of Seattle to help fund a program to rehabilitate housing and to provide jobs for the unskilled. The program will be administered by the Central Area Motivation Program, a Seattle self-help organization. Olympia also included funds to support an Ecumenical Metropolitan Ministry.

Chicago allocated $6,000 of its program budget for participation in the Chicago Interreligious Council on Urban Affairs (IRCUA), which is an interchurch effort to deal with urban problems and tensions in the Chicago Area. Kansas increased its operations by $6,000, earmarked for extra support of Turner House, an Episcopal Center for urban youth and community work in Kansas City. Michigan upped its proposed program for urban work by $23,500 to a total of $61,500, and Nebraska also approved allocation of funds for such activity.

Springfield received a report on its inner-city work in East St. Louis, jointly supported by the Diocese of Missouri. Northern Indiana is engaged in a Joint Pilot Project with Chicago. Its first effort is participation in an ecumenical Inner-city Task Force in Gary. Indianapolis passed a resolution for the formation of a task force to determine the critical needs throughout the Diocese and to devise methods of ministering to them. Bishop Donald H. V. Hallock of Milwaukee is appointing a Metropolitan Commission to concern itself with critical issues in the Milwaukee area. Northern California has a commission working on needs and making recommendations. Central New York, Oregon, and Western Kansas have indicated their support and recognition of the American Crisis as Presiding Bishop Hines outlined it.

• Resolutions designed to further equality of opportunity regardless of race were also numerous. They were mostly concerned with open housing and fair employment practices and were directed to correcting the practices of churches as well as secular firms with which congregations deal. In Chicago, clergy and laity were asked to review their club affiliations in the light of the Church's policy of non-discrimination. Chicago Episcopalians were asked to try to change discriminatory policies wherever possible and to drop affiliations where change could not be made.

• Arizona reported that the voluntary pledge system is working

Presiding Bishop Visits Colombia and Ecuador

Presiding Bishop John E. Hines chose to make his first pastoral visit, in accordance with General Convention action that formally recognizes him as chief pastor, to two Latin American Missionary Dioceses—Ecuador and Colombia. In both jurisdictions he met with all the clergy and celebrated the Holy Eucharist using the new trial liturgy. Ecumenical encounters involving both Roman Catholics and Evangelicals took place in both countries.

Ecuador—During his visit November 15-24, Bishop Hines attended the inauguration of the Ecumenical Theological Library in Quito, Ecuador. It is the first ecumenical library in that country, and its founders include Roman Catholics, Evangelicals, Lutherans, and Episcopalians. In Guayaquil, the Presiding Bishop addressed the Second Convocation of the Ecuadorian Churches, The American Society Meeting, and the delegations from the six congregations in Ecuador attending an all-day Episcopal Congress. He met with the Vicar General of the Guayaquil Roman Catholic Diocese on a 30-minute television program which was a first for Ecuador. Bishop Hines also inaugurated first services in the nearly completed Church of Christ the King, Guayaquil.

Colombia—Bishop Hines visited two churches and a school in the southern city of Cali and celebrated at the consecration of the Church of St. George, Medellin, which was built with a 1964 United Thank Offering grant. He visited a barrio squatter's settlement being aided by an ecumenical women's group from Bogotá, the nation's capital. Following a Roman Mass celebrated in his honor, Bishop Hines addressed the ecumenical women's meeting.

Reporting on his visit to the Bogotá barrio, Bishop Hines said, "After seeing crime, poverty, and delinquency there, I know that urban problems are just as intense elsewhere." In Bogotá, the Presiding Bishop also met with the congregation of Saint Paul's Church in a round table discussion of Church policy in Latin America, visited the Emanuel Clinic run by the Worldwide Evangelization Crusade, and preached the Thanksgiving Day sermon for the American Community of Bogotá.

Throughout his trip the Presiding Bishop was presented in Spanish as El Obispo Primado de la Iglesia Episcopal de los Estados Unidos—the Primate of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

Bishop Hines wears a typical ruana and greets a citizen of barrio Juan XXIII during his visit to Bogota, Colombia.

here. The rate of payment for 1967 exceeds that of previous years, and an increase of $9,000 has been pledged for 1968. Eastern Oregon passed a resolution endorsing the partnership principle and looked toward its use in the District beginning in 1969. Northern Indiana adopted a unified program budget which will combine the operating and missionary budgets beginning in 1968.

Executive Council: December Summary

- While deliberations on the Church's Special Program took much of the elected members' time at the Executive Council meeting in Greenwich, Conn., December 12-14 (see page 8), the Council also:
- Heard that 1967 General Program collections were almost on target, but that 1968 anticipations were not yet clear.
- Assigned General Convention actions to appropriate departments and divisions. The trend toward non-departmental structure was evidenced by the large number of responsibilities which received multiple assignments and will be shared by more than one department.
- Declined to act on a policy statement from the National Council of Churches on "Withholding Consumer Patronage to Secure Justice," saying a more constructive program was needed.
- Heard the Bishop of Chicago's recommendation that diocesan boundaries be studied on a regional basis, unhampered by preconceived diocesan or provincial line-ups.
- Authorized the registration of the Church as an agency to employ work conscientious objectors in civilian work.
- Approved appointments to the Theological Education Board, and the Ecumenical Relations, World Relief and Inter-Church Aid, and Good Friday Offering Committees.
- Approved Projects for Partnership, 1968 (see pages 23-34), and the continuance of extra-budgetary support for overseas MRI projects after fulfillment of diocesan and national quotas has been assured.
- Extended three Companion Dio-

Leprosy . . . a present day understanding.

When I returned to this country after twenty years as a surgeon in India, I was shocked at the widespread ignorance about leprosy.

Actually, leprosy is one of the world's most serious public health problems today. There are probably 15 to 20 million cases, and according to the best authorities, it is on the increase. Less than 25% of the estimated cases receive regular treatment, and almost 40% are afflicted with some form of disability.

Human Consequences

But the importance of the leprosy problem is not a matter of statistics. The human and social consequences are more serious than those of any other disease. Ancient superstitions and fears, social ostracism, economic loss still plague the leprosy victim and his family.

Today we know that leprosy, often called Hansen's disease, is a chronic disease of low infectivity, which can be treated with modern drugs and in some cases cured. Stigmatizing disabilities can often be prevented by early treatment, corrective surgery and physiotherapy.

A Quiet Revolution

But public knowledge of these new advances is woefully limited. Few people, for example, know that the drug of choice in leprosy treatment was first used at the U. S. Public Health Service Hospital in Carville, Louisiana, in 1942. This development marked the first major breakthrough in leprosy therapy, and paved the way for later advances in plastic and reparative surgery.

What Can Be Done

Medical research must continue, training facilities up-dated, personnel recruited. But at the same time the education of the American public must keep apace with scientific advancements.

And along with all this, leprosy sufferers need love—this is why we have a "mission"—because the church is involved with people.

Won't you send your gift today? $5 will provide administration of drugs for one year. $25 will provide an operation to restore a crippled hand.

And in appreciation for your gift, I will send you a complimentary copy of THE FIGHT AGAINST LEPROSY by Patrick Feeny. I urge you to make out your check, today.

Sincerely yours,

Church in Guatemala Big as All Outdoors

A majestic pine-tree forest recently solved a space problem for the new Missionary Diocese of Guatemala, where some 400 churchmen gathered to witness the consecration of their first bishop, the Rt. Rev. William C. Frey.

None of Guatemala's three tiny mission buildings could accommodate the crowd, so chairs, table, portable organ, and battery-powered amplifier moved outdoors.

Nine bishops and 20 priests, rep-

The newly-consecrated Bishop Frey, who will also lead the Missionary Diocese of El Salvador, used the verdant setting as a theme for his address. "We didn't want to pretend to be, or have, anything that we aren't or don't have," he said. "The Church is people, not buildings, and as we look to the future and plan our priorities, our symbol should be the tent, not the temple."

Bishop Frey, a 38-year-old native of Waco, Texas, was director of the Spanish Publications Center in San José, Costa Rica, at the time of his election. A 1952 graduate of the University of Colorado, he received his Bachelor of Theology degree from the Philadelphia Divinity School in 1955 and was ordained to the ministry the following year. From 1955-58, he served in the Diocese of Colorado's Timberline Circuit Missions program. In 1962, resenting 15 dioceses, took part in the ceremonies. Presiding Bishop John E. Hines, who arrived in Guatemala after visiting Colombia and Ecuador, served as chief consecrator, with Bishop Francisco Reus-Froylan of Puerto Rico and Bishop David Richards of Costa Rica as co-consecrators. Except for the final blessing, which Presiding Bishop Hines pronounced in English, the entire service was held in the Spanish language.

after four years' service as rector of Trinity Church, Los Alamos, New Mexico, he accepted the Costa Rica assignment. He and his wife, the former Barbara Louise Martin, have five children.

The Interreligious Foundation for Community Organization (IFCO) was formed to fund and provide information and assistance for community organizations across the country [see November issue]. But at its December meeting, the situation was reversed. IFCO got the advice.

Until now, IFCO has been composed of delegates from national denominational bodies including American Baptists, Jews, Methodists, Roman Catholics, the United Church of Christ, United Presbyterians, the Foundation for Voluntary Services, and Episcopalians. But its aim has been to listen to, and involve, people working at the local level in the field of community organization. So, at the last meeting, representatives from Houston, Texas; Detroit, Mich.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Milwaukee, Wis.; and North Carolina came to "tell it like it is."

As a result of the discussion, IFCO voted to raise its membership ceiling from twenty-five to 100 and to invite and encourage local community organizations to participate as full members.

"Anything that affects the lives of black people had better involve black people," Mr. Jimmie Givings, from the Northcott Neighborhood House in Milwaukee, said.

Another local representative said that IFCO could not determine priorities without local level information. Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum, IFCO President, agreed. "We don't want to recreate the old ball game of formalizing programs without knowing who needs them."

The pressures of rapid and constant change were recognized by almost everyone present. Mr. George Esser, Episcopal delegate and President of the North Carolina Fund, said, "I think we should remove the membership limit and encourage maximum membership for local organizations now—and come up with a plan later."

"The Episcopal Church had this same sort of problem," Mr. Leon Modeste reported. "And the Presiding Bishop made sure he was going to have black representation to determine where grants went. It was my job to get 'em. I met with them the other day, and they asked where IFCO was going. I said you would have to decide that soon. And one guy said 'Yeah, and I'll bet they put it into some committee.'"

"I need a decision today," Mr. Modeste said. "Next week it's a different ball game."

With the decision of who would participate solved, IFCO board members moved on to how to do it—how to train people to lead poor people into positions of political and economic power.

Community organization is a relatively new field, and board members were aware of the lack of skilled community organizers. They disagreed, however, on how to fill this gap.

The Rev. Douglas Still, Church Federation, Chicago, said it had been his experience that the best organizers came out of Saul Alinsky's Industrial Areas Foundation (IAF) training programs.

"There are some of us who haven't had the benefits Mr. Alinsky has. Besides being white, he has the advantage of money," Mr. Earl Allen, Houston, said. "I think that the brothers, if they had the money available, could do a good job. Some of the best organizers in the country came out of the civil-rights movement."

Mr. Eliezer Risco, from a Mexican-American Community program in Los Angeles, said, "In the late thirties there was an invasion of poor whites in California. Mexicans were deported or moved out of ties. IAF moved into California and was effective for a few years. Today they are part of the power structure we have to fight. That says that they have organizational ability, but I'm not sure its the kind we want."

Mr. Howard Fuller, North Carolina Fund, said his program used college students "because they're idealistic and will step on people's toes, because they don't know they're not supposed to." He said IAF organizers were too sophisticated to work in Rocky Mount, North Carolina.

"Many national organizations have this same problem," he explained. "They model programs on Detroit, New York, and Chicago. It's a different ball game in North Carolina, but a ball game we have to play."

Mr. Lorenzo Freeman, from Detroit, agreed. "The orientation has to be from your own manipulation of the situation. It doesn't come from classrooms. You have to live and breathe it to mold anything out of it. Dispossessed people are now finding an answer from inside, not outside. And until this internal thing happens, no one—IFCO or anyone else—can go along with it. IFCO has to see and support that." IFCO Executive Director Lucius Walker said, "We're talking about something different than what Alinsky or civil rights or professional social workers have been doing. The most serious problem we face in light of emerging consciousness is that there is a lack of black, skilled community organizers. This is why training is so important.

"We have to translate this new nuance and face it; accept the fact that a new ball game exists alongside the old one. We have to function in the old, because it's not going to disappear right away. The question is 'how do we operate in this confusion?' We won't answer the questions until we admit they exist. And we have to find the answers, because the revolution ain't gonna go away." —J. M.

3,628 reasons why the American Church Building Fund deserves your support

In the past 87 years, 3,628 churches, parish houses and rectories have been built because the American Church Building Fund was able to make resources available when they were needed. Yours may be one of these. Because the Commission has hewed straight to the line for which it was established, it has achieved one of the most impressive records in the Church for prudent money management.

Ask for a 1966 Condensed Financial Statement. It shows clearly not only how effectively the Commission's money was put to work, but how much more could have been used to good advantage if it had been available. It should encourage you to make a gift to the Fund. Next year, or the year after, you may be glad you did—for your parish may be faced with a building need.

WORLDSCENE

Sherman of Long Island, opening a centennial forum at Queens College which his diocese sponsored, said Christians today have a "heightened responsibility" for goals toward which political power should be directed.

If it is impossible, said forum member Dr. Daniel Callahan, author and associate editor of the Roman Catholic weekly, Commonweal, to have "a perfect society" because of the frailties of human beings, "we can have a good society . . . which encourages love which encourages a pervasive sense of responsibility of each person for every other person. . . ."

Dr. Callahan declared that "every important political decision" has these elements: social significance, personal significance, and a "symbolic" importance.

"My point is a simple one: There is a very good chance that whatever we do may lead someone else to act likewise. Our actions symbolize our value system . . . the curse of the democratic system is that people too often vote with the herd. The glory of the democratic system is that it is possible to influence people to choose wisely."

Another panel member, Dr. Arthur C. McGill, associate professor of theology at Princeton University, pointed out that "Christ directed His followers to relate to others in what they have, to bear with them in both their political hopes and their political hopelessness."

A third member of the panel, Dr. Andrew W. Cordier, dean of the Graduate School of International Studies at Columbia University and former executive assistant to three Secretaries-General of the U.N., said, "Many problems have become problems because of the negativism that exists . . . one of the tasks Christians have is to assess the world situation and to modify this direction."

Urging a re-definition of "national interest," Dr. Cordier stated that, "The United States needs an Ear of America as well as a Voice of America. Many of the tensions between nations would disappear if there were more listening."

New Clerical Directory

The Church Pension Fund announces that the 1968 edition of The Clerical Directory will go on sale January 31. This is the twenty-third issue since 1898.

The new edition of the Directory contains biographies of the 11,500 members of the Episcopal clergy and deaconesses; photographs of clergy groups in dioceses, districts, seminaries, branches of the armed forces and on Executive Council staff; a digest of actions taken by the 1967 General Convention; and an essay with photographs on current church architecture.

All biographical data is brought up to date from the information supplied by the clergymen and includes those ordained prior to the October 15, 1967 deadline. Biographies of clergy who failed to respond to The Directory's questionnaire were used as last submitted and marked with an asterisk. These clergy are urged to get in touch with the editor of the directory now, in the interest of greater accuracy in their biographies in the next edition.

Pamphlets containing biographies of clergy ordained between this edition and the next will be sent free of charge to all purchasers of the Directory. [Copies of the 1968 Clerical Directory may be obtained by writing directly to The Church Hymnal Corporation, 800 Second Ave., New York City 10017. The price is $12.00 per copy, postage fee; $11.00 to those enclosing a check with the order.]

NEW SHOES

The Rev. George I. Hunter, Jr., Diocese of Massachusetts, tells about a tattered and hungry little boy whose greatest desire was to own a new pair of shoes. He told an adult that he had asked God for them.

"Do you really believe in that kind of God?" the adult responded. When the boy said he did, he was asked why God hadn't already given him the shoes. "God told some people, but they forgot," was the answer.

Church School Uprising

ARE YOU the dissatisfied parent of a church school pupil? Are you a vestryman or committee member hearing grumbings and rumblings about your Sunday school? Are you a frustrated and anxious church school teacher who can't seem to meet goals amid falling attendance and not enough time? Have you heard anyone say the Sunday church school has outlived its usefulness?

Eleanor Dandt's VARIATIONS IN THE SUNDAY CHURCH SCHOOL (Seabury, $1.95) describes the ways thirty parishes have tried to work out new answers to such complaints.

The first chapter describes the last century of Sunday School evolution and the constructive changes in it during the last decade. It sets some standards which help raise the good questions you will need to begin evaluating the Christian Education in your parish with the additional welcome light of what others are doing. The experimenting parishes stretch from Long Island to Oregon, from Staten Island to Virginia, and include all sizes and situations.

There are many accounts of weekday or Saturday programs replacing or supplementing the Sunday program. In one case three parishes joined to form an Interparish School which meets after day school and is aimed at adding religious insight and enrichment to the public school curriculum. An astonishing number of churches have combined adults and children in family type classes on Sunday mornings, in homes Sunday afternoons, or in special Lenten or summer activities. Ecumenical, summer, and evening programs are well represented.

Each account given by the rector or program director is short, factual, includes the reasons for innovation, the type of program, and an evaluation equally frank about satisfactions, problems, and drawbacks.

Gladys Quist says in the book's preface, "We hope you will read VARIATIONS ON THE SUNDAY CHURCH SCHOOL with your own children and young people in mind. You may, as a result, endorse and be satisfied with what is going on in your own parish.

"You may, on the other hand, want to borrow from these innovations whatever can be adapted . . . to your own situation. . . . The function of this publication is to help you look hard at your own set-up so that you know why, in the name of modern education and Christian witness, you are doing what you do."

We think it fulfills that function extremely well. —M.C.M.

LAW AT THE TOP

Have you ever wished for an absorbing, understandable account of the evolution of individual liberty in American Constitutional law? If so, you will not be disappointed in FREEDOM AND THE COURT by Henry J. Abraham (Oxford, $7.50).

The author, a professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, has a rare ability to make technical material come alive in terms of the personal needs of parties who carried their cases to the Supreme Court.

The chapter headed "Religion" is an excellent account of the practical meaning which the Court has found in the Constitution's double-barrelled prohibition of restraints upon the "free exercise" of religion and of laws "respecting an establishment of religion." Abraham ably presents the Court's recently developed doctrines that what the Constitution prescribes is government neutrality toward religion. The chapter highlights the Court's principal unfinished business in this area, the question: Are financial provisions for secular education in church-related schools valid as a means of neutralizing public school taxes which limit the religious freedom of parents who choose a church-sponsored school for their children?

The first chapter traces the evolution of what the author calls the "double standard." This is the distinction between claims of freedom to conduct business and own property (in which the Court typically refuses to overrule legislative policy) and claims to civil liberties (in which the Court applies stricter constitutional standards).

Other chapter titles include "The Fascinating World of 'Due Process of Law'," "The Precious Freedom of Expression," and "Race: The American Dilemma."

Professor Abraham is not one of those who deplores the Court's expanding view of the rights of persons accused or suspected of crimes. Nor does he join the critics who demand stricter standards for the control of obscene "literature." In general his purpose is not to pass judgment but to make the Court's work understandable as it draws the line between individual freedom and the rights of the community.

—WILBUR G. KATZ

EXUBERANCE MANUAL

Dr. Norman Vincent Peale's latest book, like its predecessors, consists of a simple assertion: ENTHUSIASM MAKES THE DIFFERENCE (Prentice-Hall, $4.95), followed by several hundred pages of anecdotal illustration. For the most part, Dr. Peale sees enthusiasm in the colloquial sense as a synonym for exuberance and sees it as a product of self-persuasion.

A person can make of himself what he wants about what he wants," says the author, "provided he wants to badly enough and correctly goes about doing it." Later, he says enthusiasm means "God in you, or full of God" and concludes that enthusiasm can work miracles in solving problems because "God Himself in you supplies wisdom, courage, strategy, and what is necessary to deal successfully with all difficulties."

The tension between enthusiasm and self-induced exuberance and enthusiasm as the indwelling power of God is resolved by relegating God to the role of silent partner in the pursuit of success. God is steadfast, reliable, and undemanding. He supplies the power but never disputes the validity of the goal. Perhaps this is why theologians react so negatively to Dr. Peale's message and ministry.

In thus reacting, one is likely to overlook the fact that, on one level, Dr. Peale is obviously right. Enthusiasm, even the vague heartiness that Dr. Peale recommends, does make a difference, though hardly the difference. But once that much has been admitted, the question remains as to why it should be necessary to write a whole book to prove the obvious.

The reason, I suspect, is concealed in the dark recesses of what Dr. Peale might call "the method of enthusiasm." Do you lack enthusiasm? You can acquire it. Act as though you already have it. "Repeatedly believe that you are in the process of self-creating the quality you have undertaken to develop."

Fine idea. But I wonder whether any man can "repeatedly believe" what in fact he does not believe. Wishthink, though an attractive possibility, is not a very realistic one. But the man who really wants to believe can get outside support. Someone else can tell him, over and over again, that he really is enthusiastic. Dr. Peale gladly, one longs to say enthusiastically, steps in to fill the bill. Dr. Peale is available. Here is this book. . . .

In other words, the purpose of the book is not to provide information or entertainment. Its argument will hardly convince the unconvinced. Its style will certainly not delight the sensitive reader. But it may help to sustain the wavering believers. If he cannot quite convince himself that he has enthusiasm, Dr. Peale can.

An outsider can hardly evaluate this process. Perhaps it does no harm; perhaps it may even do some people a great deal of good. In any case, the book itself is an instrument to be judged by the purposes it serves rather than as a thing in itself.

FLY WITH CORITA

The fifty pages of FOOTNOTES AND HEADLINES, a play-pray book by Sister Corita, would be a bargain at twice the book's $6.00 price (Herder and Herder and United Church Press). Each page glows with one of Sister Corita's famous arrangements of color and typography—the "headlines" of the book's title. The "footnotes" are a running commentary designed to be read equally well all at once or at the rate of a page a day. This is not a book; it is an experience; a remarkable vista opening into the Way of Life. —M.M.

From the perspective of the Christian theologian, however, one can say only that it seems too bad that this little exercise in psychic manipulation should advertise itself as a product of the Christian religion.

—EARL H. BRILL

RESURRECTION SPECIAL

Stuart Jackman's THE DAVIDSON AFFAIR (Eerdmans, $3.50) is a gimmicky book and could easily have been a dud—but is not. It is the story of the Resurrection as it strikes Cass Tennel, putting together a TV documentary on the event a week later. It is also the story of the life of Jesus Davidson and its effect upon those who were touched by it—Pilate, Thomas Didymus, The Magdala, Caiaphas, Cleopas, and last of all Cass Tennel himself. The characterizations are fully alive, and the "scandal" of the Cross carries its full electrical charge, still able to shock anyone who touches it. —M.M.

No Crutches for Cool Hand Luke

IN COOL HAND LUKE, Paul Newman brilliantly portrays the plight of modern man trapped in a world of artificially imposed convention. Though the movie's theme is existential and religious, the symbolism is rarely heavy-handed, and the film work is unusually interesting.

Luke is on a chain-gang, being punished for sawing the tops off parking meters. His punishment is cutting down weeds on roads no one travels. When he cannot stay within the predetermined patterns, his punishment is made more absurd, mainly digging a ditch, filling it, then digging it up again.

The only dividing lines between these ridiculous acts are the "rules and regulations" for which Luke, the free man even in captivity, has little use. Luke wants only to be left alone, free to work out his own destiny. He rejects even his fellow prisoners when they begin to expect this or that from him.

One of the guards, concerned over

MOVIES

Luke's atheism, begins: "I never shot a white man" and says he can see Luke is the Christian type because, after all, he looks "clean-cut." Luke returns the guard's hypocrisy by using him as a foil in another escape attempt.

When Luke asks God for help or relief, it is little wonder he expects this God, like everyone else, to send him a set of rules and end the anguish of always having to decide for himself.

No such luck. In the film's final sequence, Luke realizes that, like himself, God is "a hard man to get along with." God has given us the dignity of freedom, not just another set of rules. In return, He demands that we honor His integrity just as Luke demanded that others respect his.

Luke discovers he will not find answers on his knees, begging God to be his crutch in a pinch. Only when we accept the terrible weight of our God-given freedom will we find a way out of the contemporary bondage that imprisons and eventually destroys Cool Hand Luke.

—JOHN DILLON

TELEVISION

Martin Luther was something more than the firebrand German monk who ignited the Protestant reformation 450 years ago by nailing his protest to a church door. One glimpse of that "something more" may be visible in the ninety minutes of playwright John Osborne's Luther which will be aired Monday night, January 29 at 8:30 EST by ABC-TV, sponsored by Xerox. Osborne's offbeat play shook the London theatre in 1961, garnered the Drama Critic's and "Tony" awards in New York two years later.

Osborne's Luther is angry, complex, earthy, and a powerfully moving preacher. While this English playwright's "angry young man" angle of vision gives us something other than a balanced, historical perspective on the German reformer, it will leave any viewer with a strong suspicion that the potent genius of Wittenburg and Worms intended something deeper and more revolutionary than the "Reformation" achieved.

Robert Shaw, who portrayed Henry VIII in A Man for All Seasons, will star in the title role.

RECORDINGS

VIVA VILLANCICOS

The Choir of the Episcopal Church's Bella Vista Children's Home, Panama, may never become a Panamanian version of the Von Trapp singers, but the two groups do share at least two things in common: In the first place, they both sing well. And secondly, both groups came to their singing because of a need.

For some time, interested people in Panama had expressed a desire for a well-trained choir which would sing the bright, bouncy Spanish carols, called villancicos.

On a visit to Madrid, one of the chaplains of the Home found music for villancicos not available in Panama. Three months later, at the Mid-night Eucharist of San Marcos Episcopal Church, where the girls are members, the choir sang a selection of villancicos for the first time. Their public career had been launched. And now this happy music has been captured on a fine record (San Marcos: SM2157 Mono) which includes 21 songs on two sides.

Have and Have Not

This column is designed to bring together those who need certain church supplies and those who have a surplus. Please observe these simple rules: 1) write directly to the parish, mission, or individual making the request; 2) do not ship any material to The Episcopalian.

Junior class seminarians at the School of Theology at Sewanee are helping to maintain St. John the Baptist Church in Battle Creek, Tenn. They would like to obtain all colors of pulpit and lectern antependia, burse and veil, and altar cover. If your parish has any of these to share, please write to Mr. Thomas F. Reed, III, c/o The School of Theology, The University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. 37375.

The principal of St. Andrew's School (Anglican) on Fogo Island asks for books for students attending grades one through eleven. Reading is the main pastime for the students on this small island off the coast of Newfoundland. Mr. Hewitt asks for second-hand books "loved by children" and reference books. Please write to Mr. B. L. Hewitt, St. Andrew's School, Fogo, N.D.E. Newfoundland, Canada.

The Rev. H. Eugene Welsh would like to obtain a cabinet with sufficient drawers for eucharistic vestments for the church where he is vicar. If you know where one is available, please write to the Rev. Mr. Welsh at The Episcopal Church of the Holy Apostles, 57th Avenue West and Elinor Street, Duluth, Minn. 55807.

One brass sanctuary lamp, hanging type on chain (holds seven or eight lights) is available to any parish mission which can use it. Please write to the Rev. Sylvan W. Law, St. John's Episcopal Church, P.O. Box 146, Marshfield, Missouri 64850.

If your parish or mission wishes to list church supply needs or surplus, please write: Have and Have Not Editor, THE EPISCOPALIAN, 1930 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19103.

So What's New?

ing for qualified Negro personnel, to discern another tie between freedom of residence and other opportunities. Many companies have moved to the suburbs. To accept jobs with these firms, non-white applicants must either become wrong-way commuters or submit to the humiliating process of finding housing.

The odds are heavily against a Negro's getting the house he wants just because he likes it, or because it is near a good school, or because his wife likes to garden. One American in ten is a Negro. One vacant dwelling in 500, it has been estimated, is available on a true non-discriminatory basis, and this means that a Negro has about a one-to-fifty chance of finding the housing of his choice.

It is ironic that in a money-oriented world like ours, one of the most expensive purchases a family ever makes—the house they live in—is the only necessity they cannot choose freely. If a merchant owns a grocery, he welcomes all customers. If he owns a clothing store, he certainly will not hesitate to sell a Negro a coat. But if he has a house for sale, he is often highly protective about his right to sell it and blind to the buyer's right to invest. This is an attitude sometimes cloaked in a judgment of whether or not the buyer is "desirable." No law will ever force anyone to sell anything to "undesirables"—though what that means, especially in a Christian context, is rather puzzling.

Lost and Found

A French sociologist recently suggested that, as society gets bigger and more complicated, and its institutions more strangled by red tape, we may be entering a time when individual action may become the most effective kind.

The growing numbers of people working singly and in fair-housing groups know that open-housing can be achieved. The 400 American communities where fair-housing is being practiced now are living examples that this form of justice works. ◀

How To Find An Invisible World

BY C. S. LEWIS

S. Lewis wrote seven books, called the Narnia Series, about another world than ours, which several sets of children discovered in several different ways. Here is an episode from the early part of the first book.

WHEN AT LAST they were all alone together, Lucy burst out:

"Peter! Susan! It's all true. There is a country you can get to through the wardrobe. Edmund and I both went to it. We met one another in there, in the wood. Go on, Edmund; tell them all about it."

And now we come to one of the strangest things in this story. Edmund decided to let Lucy down. He gave her a little snigger and said, "Oh yes, Peter and I have been playing—pretending that all her story about a country in the wardrobe is true. Just for fun, of course. There's nothing there really."

Poor Lucy gave Edmund one look and rushed out of the room. When they found her, a good deal later, everyone could see that she had been crying.

The result was the next morning Peter and Susan decided that they would go and tell the whole thing to the Professor. So they went and knocked at the study door, and the Professor said "Come in." Then he sat listening to them with the tips of his fingers pressed together and never interrupting, till they had finished the whole story. After that he said nothing for quite a long time. Then he cleared his throat and said the last thing either of them expected:

"How do you know," he asked, "that your sister's story is not true?"

Susan said, "But Edmund said that they had only been pretending."

"That is a point," said the Professor, "which certainly deserves careful consideration. For instance—if you will excuse me for asking the question—does your experience lead you to regard your brother or sister as the more reliable? I mean, which is more truthful?"

"That's just the funny thing about it, sir," said Peter. "Up till now I'd have said Lucy every time."

"In general," said Susan, "I'd say the same as Peter, but this couldn't be true—all this about the other country."

"That is more than I know," said the Professor, "and a charge of lying against someone whom you have always found truthful is a serious thing."

"We were afraid it mightn't even be lying," said Susan; "we thought there might be something wrong with Lucy."

"Madness, you mean?" said the Professor quite coolly. "Oh, you can make your minds quite easy about that. One has only to look at her and talk to her to see that she is not mad."

"But then," said Susan, and stopped. She had never dreamed that a grown-up would talk like the Professor.

"Logic!" said the Professor half to himself. "Why don't they teach logic at these schools? There are only three possibilities. Either your sister is telling lies, or she is mad, or she is telling the truth. You know she doesn't tell lies and it is obvious she is not mad. For the moment then and unless any further evidence turns up, we must assume that she is telling the truth."

"But how could it be true, sir?" said Peter. "If it was real, why doesn't everyone find this country every time they go to the wardrobe? I mean, there was nothing there when we looked; even Lucy didn't pretend there was."

"What has that to do with it?" said the Professor.

"Well, sir, if things are real, they're there all the time."

"Are they?" said the Professor.

"But do you really mean, sir," said Peter, "That there could be other worlds—all over the place, just round the corner—like that?"

"Nothing is more probable," said the Professor, taking off his spectacles and beginning to polish them, while he muttered to himself, "I wonder what they do teach them at these schools."

"But what are we to do?" said Susan. She felt that the conversation was beginning to get off the point.

"My dear young lady," said the Professor, suddenly looking up with a sharp expression at both of them. "There is one plan which no one has yet suggested and which is well worth trying."

"What's that?" said Susan.

"We might try minding our own business," said he. And that was the end of the conversation. ◀

KNOW YOUR DIOCESE

Just over 100 years ago, on May 5, 1867, the first recorded Episcopal Church service was held in Utah. The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle had been elected Missionary Bishop of Montana with jurisdiction over Utah and Idaho but had to delay his consecration for four months until his thirtieth birthday, since that is the minimum age for consecration as a bishop. While waiting, he recruited missionaries to work with him. His trailbreakers, the Rev. George W. Foote and the Rev. Thomas W. Haskins, preceded the Bishop to Utah by two months.

A Sunday school organized by a Congregationalist chaplain in Salt Lake City, was turned over to the Episcopal clergymen. The two priests helped to establish St. Mark's School, the first non-Mormon school in the state. This and other schools which Episcopalians established later provided most of the available education for Utah's children from 1867 until 1890 when the public school system was established.

During his episcopate, Bishop Tuttle helped found St. Mark's Hospital, then the only one between Denver and San Francisco. At its present site since 1893, St. Mark's recently acquired property for further expansion.

Utah was set apart as a separate jurisdiction in 1908. The Episcopal Church's history in Utah shows that the one constant in its life has been change. Episcopalians in Utah have a habit of measuring success of the Church by how well it anticipates and meets change. Utah Episcopalians are opening new work in growing areas and in new social fields, realizing that changes in population, economics, and social needs may call for radical change, or even abandoning some activities of the past.

The Episcopal Church is number two in size among the non-Mormon churches in the state. The Roman Catholic Church is the largest. Twenty-one parishes and missions with 8,201 baptized persons (4,617 communicants) being served by twenty clergymen make up the District of Utah.

The Conference Center at Brighton, a former Girls' Friendly camp site, was host last summer to a variety of conferences and camping sessions. The district and the center's staff have expanded their outlook on the center's usefulness. They recently cooperated with community agencies in offering some young non-Episcopalians a camping experience.

In addition to two Indian mission churches, the Missionary District of Utah operates the Intermountain School for Indians which includes elementary and high school departments. Some Intermountain graduates go on to Utah State University in Logan.

The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Watson, Bishop of Utah, has asked the national Church's Executive Council to make a survey of the District to establish what needs to be done, for the District to become a viable diocese. This action looks forward to the day when the only "missionary districts" in the Episcopal Church will be overseas.

Utah and the Diocese of Edmonton (Canada) are MR's companions. Parishes in the two jurisdictions are together exploring what mutual responsibility and interdependence means for them. The District of Utah, in cooperation with St. Mark's Cathedral, is also helping support a treasure for the Diocese of Malawi in the Province of Central Africa.

The Rt. Rev. Richard Simpson Watson, Seventh Bishop of Utah, was born in Del Norte, Colorado, on July 14, 1902, the son of the Rev. Jonathan and Eliza Watson. He was graduated from the University of North Dakota, receiving an LL.B. degree. The University honored Bishop Watson in 1957 with an LL.D. degree, and did Westminster College in 1956.

Bishop Watson received his theological education at Virginia Theological Seminary, which also honored him with a D.D. degree in 1952. The Church Divinity School of the Pacific accorded him the same honor in 1951.

Following his ordination to the priesthood in June, 1932, Bishop Watson served churches in Sherman and Houston, Texas; Tuscaloosa, Alabama; and Seattle, Washington. He was consecrated to be Missionary Bishop of Utah on May 1, 1951.

The former Rachel Sumners and Bishop Watson were married in 1932. Their son Richard, twenty-three, is a college student.

During Bishop Watson's episcopate, nine new missions have been established and two have become self-supporting parishes, the Conference Center at Brighton has been built, and two wings were added to St. Mark's Hospital. He has ordained sixteen men to the ministry. The Bishop has been instrumental in helping to establish St. Mark's Boys' School and after the combining of administrations and faculties the Rowland Hall-St. Mark's School is now a boarding day, coeducational facility with approximately 300 students.
